Don't let this happen to you

Local couple had belongings held hostage by moving company until they paid an extra $1,500

Sharon and David had to move four times from hotel to hotel while they waited for their moving company to deliver their belongings. Unfortunately, the moving company was not responsive to phone calls or emails. They were held in limbo for weeks with several attempts to secure a delivery date. Instead of providing a resolution, they were informed by the moving company that they would have to pay an additional $1,500 for final delivery or they wouldn't get their possessions.

Rogue mover scams begin with an estimate that is significantly less than estimates from other moving companies. Once the household goods have been packed and loaded, the rogue mover will hold your personal items hostage, demanding additional payments, prior to delivery. Despite efforts to curtail moving related fraud, reports of Rogue Movers are increasing.
